GameReactor.com.(CNN) — If you love tacos and your dream trip is a little bit of north of the border in one sweet package, the new Cheesecake Factory restaurant in Taipei is for you. The 40-seat restaurant is a sugary celebration of all things taco, while taking advantage of the Taiwanese capital's best snack of the day: tang yuan. As the name suggests, tang yuan are deep-fried cut-out slices of pastry, or you can get them in a pan for more of a crêpe effect. Each tang yuan is filled with a different kind of yummy treat. You can have them dipped in green or red Chinese sauce, which is a nice little nod to the fact that Chinese and Taiwanese are both on this side of the Taiwan Strait. While the entire restaurant is taco themed, its menu is actually less taco-focused than you'd expect. The restaurant sells cheesy and sourdough tortillas, and is less about taco-centric menu options like a burrito. It also has "Mexican-style" sandwiches, but we're not exactly sure what kind of sandwiches this is -- they might be ham and cheese, or torta de fideos. If you want to try the taco version of Taiwanese fried chicken, they're available. But as with the other Taco Bell restaurants in the United States, the Taiwanese restaurant serves the best version of this snack. It's exactly as you'd imagine it, and it's a totally normal snack. If you really want to make this into a fair comparison, this is the McDonald's version of Taiwanese fried chicken. Cheesecake Factory Taipei / Facebook The Taiwanese version is crispy, crunchy, and the breading is actually soaked into the chicken before frying. It's all served up on a dark chocolate tortilla, with a sweet-smelling and deep-fried golden batter coating, which is then smashed up with the rest of the chicken. The tang yuan is then smothered in more of the tang yuan batter, with sauce and cheese. The result is a crispy, sweet, and chewy (and sometimes greasy) snack that's sure to make any deep-fried food lover fall in love with this world. They're also sold 82157476af
